A. S. Hall, a desperado from the mountains, came to attend court. Late in the afternoon he got thoroughly tanked, went to the ladies' waiting room at the Union Station and flourishing his gun ran out all the ladies there. One did not stop until she reached the police station and informed the chief. He was fined $30 and given ten days in jail.

During the month of February 60 arrests were made. This is a slight decrease from January.

COOK HAD BECOME

Much Wonderment at Social Matrons' Meeting Before the New Member Explained.

It was almost the unanimous opinion at the Social Matrons' meeting that it was impossible to keep a cook more than a month without changing. "However," announced the president, "if any person present knows of an exceptional case let her speak."

At this the New Member timidly arose in their midst. "The exception is in my house," she said. "This caused the others to sit up. 'How long have you had your cook?' quizzed the president. 'Over five years.'"

For a moment the others stared in amazement; then heads began to bob in admiration and more heads began to swing sideways in vigorous distrust of this statement.

"Is this cook entirely satisfactory as a cook?"

"My husband thinks not, but she stays, nevertheless."

"How do you manage to keep her, then?"

"Because she won't go."

"Aha!"

This ejaculation which escaped from the president's mouth was flashed like magic through the meeting until it became a huge wave.

The president regarded the New Member with half pity, half scorn. "New Member," said she, the next moment, "instead of advancing a case in which a long-sought solution might have been found, you expose yourself as being worse off than any of your sisters. You show that by allowing this cook to stay over the month you have enabled the mental to attain and hold an ascendancy over you and your husband—just the thing this society has so long fought against! No doubt you rue this day, New Member!"

"I do not!" she replied, bridling through the sniffs and tart insinuations that scintillated about her, "for in my house I am the cook!"

Devotion to Sarah.

That matinee girls in an exaggerated form are not specialties of this country is evidenced by the following from a Paris paper:

"They were a bevy of about ten young girls, seated yesterday morning on a bench opposite 56 Boulevard Pereire."

"Why? They were awaiting the return home of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt from a triumphal tour of the north of France, for which she had used an automobile for the first time."

The girls knew very well that Mme. Bernhardt was due to arrive yesterday, but—at what time? Having no precise information at that point, they had begun mounting guard at nine in the morning before the home of their idol. Noon came—one o'clock—but no automobile.

"But they were not discouraged. Rather than desert their post they decided to lunch right there on the bench."

"Two o'clock, three, four. At last there is the honk of a horn. The ten girls pick up ten bouquets and rush toward the approaching automobile."

"A radiant smile from Sarah is their reward, and they trip away, quite happy."

Holland Lives Up to Her Pictures.

Holland is one European country that looks like her pictures. There is no better use for the word quaint than to apply it to Holland. The farmers really wear wooden shoes. The land really is diked. Black and white Holstein cattle really pervade the landscape. The men really wear blue jeans shirts outside their trousers as they work in the fields. On hundreds of heads of women in any crowd the silver hair baskets, covered with lace net, really may be seen. The girls and women are really red-cheeked, without artificial coloring. The fields really abound with wild flowers and windmills really sway their gaunt, awkward arms in the wind. There is no sham, no pomp and splendor, no fuss and feather in the country. One gets the impression of a rugged, shag-bating, simple, kind-hearted, happy race, in going through Holland.—From William Allen White's Letter to the Emporia Gazette.

A Few Words to Fools.

There is a fool born every minute, so we are told, but there is also a great mortality among them. There are fewer active ones alive today than there were last week, or than there will be next Monday morning. It seems useless to say much to this kind of people, but we do wish to give a few suggestions in the interest of those who are not fools, but friends and relatives of fools.

Unless you are an expert boatman, do not take a boat out on the water and in no event unless you are able to control all those who are in it.

Do not try to see how deep you can dive nor how far you can swim into danger.

Do not try to see if your automobile can make 70 miles an hour, as guaranteed by the man from whom you bought it.

Do not blow your horns out simply because the girl doesn't like you or because you can't pay your debts. Let others do the worrying.

A Good Excuse.

He—Confound it! We've been sitting on wet paint.

She—Yes, dear, I know we have.

He—And you never told me!

She—Don't be angry, dearest. You had just begun to tell me that you loved me, and how could I interrupt you?

WOMAN EASILY THE VICTOR

Amusing Comedy in a London Court—Prisoner More Than Met His Match.

There was a rather amusing episode at London sessions recently. In the dock stood a short, young man, who skillfully questioned the witnesses against him. Eventually a little woman, looking very meek, but shaking with excitement, entered the box. In quiet tones she answered the queries of counsel, but when the prisoner's turn came the witness became increasingly emphatic in her responses, and louder and louder grew her answers, until she was positively shouting.

The prisoner tuned his voice to accord with hers, and both were engaged in trying to drown each other's noisy sentences. Suddenly the man ceased, exclaimed "Fehew!" stuck his hands deep into his pockets, and promenade with long, stiff-legged strides around the dock.

"Fehew!" he said, coming to a dead stop and glancing at the woman whose vehemence and volubility had gained for her a victory. "Fehew! A woman can always speak longer than a man. Why, you're as bad as the suffragettes—and worse." With a hopeless shrug of the shoulders he lapsed into silence, while the court laughed loudly.—London Express.

COULDN'T HELP BUT BELIEVE

Suburbanite Had Ample Evidence of Truth Contained in the Occult.

"Do I believe in the occult? Sure, I do," said the suburbanite as he settled down into his seat in the smoking car and filled his pipe. "I was just as great a skeptic as you are until a week ago. I was firmly convinced that table manipulation was a fake, that mind reading was pure guesswork, and that all alleged psychic phenomena could be attributed to natural causes. But now I'm willing to accept the entire propaganda. Nothing is too obscure for me to accept on blind faith. I've experienced a complete change of heart as they used to say in the old Methodist camp meetings."

"You see it was this way. My friend Buggins, who is really a bug on the occult, induced me to go to a seance with him the other afternoon, and prevailed upon me to have a sitting. In spite of my non-belief he said 'I was a good subject, and I guess I was. The lady who was delivering the soul fluid told me I should have trouble with a stout dark woman. All the way out on the train that evening the idea haunted me. I couldn't get it out of my head.'"

"And, say, she was right. What happened? Why, when I got home, I found myself up against the proposition of firing the colored cook. Sure, I believe in the occult. oGt a light?"

Actor's Hard Task.

"About the hardest thing I ever did," said little James E. Rosen, the "Skookums" of the New Yorks playing at the Lyceum, "was to face the little tots at the Jewish orphan asylum when I set out to entertain them. Cared-for and sheltered as they are, their condition so appealed to me that I don't know how I ever got through without breaking down."

Rosen had gone out to the asylum according to promise, the other afternoon in the midst of a storm, and the children went wild over him. Afterward he spent an hour looking the place over and chumming with the little ones which in his case wasn't so difficult, on account of his own size, or the lack of it.

"I asked one little girl, a newcomer, how she liked the institution," he said, "and her answer was both funny and pathetic. 'We gets meals for breakfast,' she said. 'Sounds funny, doesn't it? Well, think it over and see if you can't appreciate the little girl's gratitude for a new view of life. It just about got me going, I can tell you.'—Cleveland Leader.

Decayed Families.

We have known Morleys who were entirely ignorant of the race from which they came. Sometimes it is far otherwise. The family of Conyers is a remarkable example. It ended in the last baronet, Sir Thomas, who died in 1819 without male issue. He would have passed away in the parish workhouse of Cheshire street had not Robert Surtees of Mainsforth, the historian of the County of Palestine of Durham, and other generous neighbors, intervened. To the last he showed that he was well aware of the dignity of the house he represented, and for some time declined to receive assistance from his friends. Another remarkable case is that of Grenville. This family was noteworthy in the wars of the Caroline period, yet as time passed sank so low that two of the members were at one time receiving parish relief, and one of them, evidently by some mistake which it is difficult to account for, was twice picked for high sheriff at the very time he was a pauper.—Athenaeum.

Britain's Upper House.

Britain's house of lords has now and has had in times past many nicknames. Some modern Englishmen call it the "chamber of horrors" and the "lithal chamber." When William Pitt "told upstairs," as Lord Chesterfield put it, and became earl of Chatham, Chesterfield spoke of it as that "hospital of incurables." Chatham himself used to call it "the tapestry." In allusion to its usual splendid lifelessness.
